History Of The Old Key Lime House

The Key Lime House was built in 1889 by Morris Benson Lyman, who was the founding father of Lantana. The Cordero family purchased the Lyman property in 1986 to continue a 103 year old tradition. Having served food since 1889, it is considered the oldest waterfront restaurant in Florida. In 2003, the name was modified to The Old Key Lime House to reflect the Cordero family's cherished Key West heritage. Their lineage traces back to the Architect of Key West himself, William Kerr. The family also operated the first ever grocery store/restaurant/liquor stores in Key West under Virgil Cordero in the late 1800's.

But in 2005, the restaurant took a direct hit from Hurricane Wilma, and changed our look dramatically. The main dining room was completely destroyed, the original tin roof was peeled off and scattered all throughout Lantana. Major renovations were required. The family brought in Chief Jim Billie of the Seminole Indian Tribe, and thanks to his brilliant expertise, we now feature the largest free-standing chickee hut in the state. Wilma's Gate is all that remains from the front side of the dining room. The Cordero family continues a very long and respected history in the Florida restaurant industry dating back to the founding of Key West. Their newest generation of Cordero's has taken over and leads the family business into the future.
